We launched the Atlas of Longitudinal Datasets!

On the 22nd of January, our team celebrated the launch of a new discoverability tool, the Atlas of Longitudinal Datasets. The Atlas is an online searchable platform with information about longitudinal datasets from across the world. The aim of the platform is to increase the findability and uptake of longitudinal data and facilitate researchers, funders and others with exploring the richness and areas of opportunity in longitudinal research globally.

It was wonderful to celebrate the release of this new, free resource. We are thankful for all of the support we have received from the Wellcome Trust, our collaborators, pilot testers and attendees in person and online.

Atlas launch event highlights: Hearing from the stakeholders

The launch event included a presentation by Louise, a demo of the Atlas by Bridget and a panel discussion among representatives from the government, research, the Atlas team, funders and Lived Experience Advisors. The discussion explored the process and challenges of developing the Atlas and its potential for mental health advancements across sectors.
